Character Background

- He was born from a rock.
- He is powerful and skilled because he has mastered Kung Fu disciplines.
- He became king after he got rid of a tiger spirit that haunted the mountain for a long time.

Internals

Mental: He has heightened senses because of his Kung Fu disciplines, He can be highly focused and a quick learner when he is determined to do something.

Spiritual: He does not have any spiritual beliefs until the end when he becomes a disciple of Tze-Yo-Tzuh believing in and worshipping this god.

Emotional: The Monkey King presents himself as easily agitated and very aggressive when things are not going exactly his way, he is always very proud of himself he is also very confident, infact overconfident sometimes.

Externals

Dress

Fact 1 He wears more and more stuff that was more and more sophisticated as the chapters go on, from wearing nothing when he was just a normal monkey to wearing what looks like gold plating on his shoulders and hips by the end.

- Fact 2 The most important thing he wears are shoes when he wants to stop being a monkey.

Movement

- Fact 1 Monkey King always has straight and direct movements even when he is fighting.

Include picture

- Fact 2 The only time he changes the way he moves is when he transforms into Chin-Kee.

Externals

Posture: Monkey King always keeps whatever posture he is doing at the time, start, focused and proud looking.

Mannerisms: The only part of his mannerisms that I haven't talked about is his face which does change throughout the chapters, it is normally filled with anger or discontent but sometimes he is generally happy in his face, when he is trying to not be a monkey he takes on a somewhat emotionless face a lot of the time.

Personal Thoughts

I like the monkey king because his story is more entertaining and interesting to me with the action and interesting mythology in it. The other two stories are just kind of boring because we take time to read it and stick on the same chapter for a little while answering questions but the monkey king chapters take a longer time to get old. Also the mythical things happening in the other chapters just feel out of place, also probably because we take so long to finish each chapter. It was a little bit weird to me when I began to notice that the story of the monkey king in this does differ from the original somewhat, at least it did from the story that we watched on Youtube before we began to read the book itself.

The only resource I used were the book.
